Credits: Sean Adams and Sandbox Games - The Sky UI Team Special Thanks: Sean Adams and Sandbox Games - The Sky UI Team Special Thanks:Sean Adams and Sandbox Games - The Sky UI TeamThis Mod was made for the Zero Hour Teaser Pack by Daniel B.P., who also released it to the Public Domain (do whatever you want with it) on Nov. 25, 2014. We cannot take credit for anything related to the Zero Hour Teaser Pack. Special thanks to:GregoryA for his comment which pointed out the complete placeholder (I used that term lightly) of the Zero Hour Teaser Pack by Daniel B.P. that had been released to the Public Domain (do whatever you want with it) on Nov. 25, 2014. Special thanks to:Trevor Porteous for his concept of the main character and for the play scheme that was written up for this mod by me. I would not have been able to create a main character with more life-like features if it wasn't for him. Special thanks to:Tom S for providing the text that goes into the Courier's Dialogue as well as the Courier at Pharos Dune. Special thanks to:Dark_Water for his concept of allowing his NPCs to respond to their own kidnappings, but only when in their own city. Special thanks to:Laserblueblade from the [Kanreth] forums who implemented the Exile Creeper of the Keepers. Special thanks to:ModdingInfo for making the ModHut so that I can modify the Scripts as much as I want, as well as for all of the Scripts he has made for me that I have included with my mods. Special thanks to:SaintLogh for making the PlayerPage module so that I can

What's new in Paralines The Last Paladin Original Sound Track:

The Last paladin: A Link to the Past , also known as Zelda II: The Last Guardian, is an action-adventure video game developed by Eon Productions and published by Nintendo for the Game Boy color handheld video game console. As the sequel to The Legend of Zelda: Link's Awakening (1986), it was released in Japan in 1991, and in North America in 1993. The game originally took inspiration from a concept entitled Tower of Blue, which was developed for the NES and intended to be a Link to the Past sequel, though the game was never developed beyond the first prototype and demo level. It was followed by two other spin-off The Last chapters, first released as the Nintendo GameCube game Four Swords, later re-released as Four Swords Adventures. Link's Awakening was the start of a new series developed by Miyamoto after he succeeded on The Legend of Zelda; this new series gained the reputation of being the game most strongly oriented towards action/adventure. In the same way, The Last paladin, like the first The Last chapters, was a spin-off game of the same series. Eon Productions, the developer of The Last chapters, was given complete freedom to design the game's characters, story, and gameplay; early in the development, Eon producer Yoshio Okamoto considered the game a different series from the original Legend of Zelda. However, several early ideas and prototypes were based on the aforementioned Tower of Blue concept. The Last chapter was originally planned for a Nintendo Entertainment System (NES) release during the same year as the original Legend of Zelda, but early difficulties with the analog controls restricted it to handhelds. In particular, The Last paladin would originally introduce the Game Boy's motion sensing capabilities for the first time. Link's Awakening holds an aggregated gameplay score of 89 out of 100 on Metacritic, and a 9.5 out of 10 on GameRankings based on four reviews (three of which did not mention the motion sensing capabilities). It was praised for its realistic depiction of the landscape, both on land and in the sea, and received critical acclaim for its gameplay, graphics, and music. It was a commercial success, and was the top-selling Game Boy game in the United States during the year of its release, despite lack of a Game Boy Color; its sales and critical reception led to a Game Boy Advance sequel in 1999. The game was not re-released on other platforms until 2006, on the Nintendo DS Virtual Console service.
